ASU distinguished alumnus gives lecture with mentor

See Seng Tan, who graduated ASU with a PhD in political science in 1999, is this year's Distinguished Alumni Speaker for the School of Politics and Global Studies. Each year the school honors an outstanding alumnus for their accomplishments by inviting them back to ASU to speak with faculty and students.

"I am thrilled to be able to come back here and meet with former professors of mine," said Tan. "It's great to come back to such a friendly environment; really it's like coming home."

ASU expert: The time is now for an end to the Macedonian name game

Leaders in Greece and the Republic of Macedonia are close to striking a deal on the use of the name “Macedonia.”

To gain insight on this issue, ASU Now turned to Keith Brown, director of ASU's Melikian Center, whose individual research focuses on politics, culture and identity in the Balkans.
