Passion with a purpose

Forged by his foster childhood, ASU political science alumnus and Oxford scholar Frank Smith III wants to pave a better path for others through public service career.

A discussion with fellow students during Smith's freshman year led to him testifying on behalf of an Arizona state bill to abolish tuition fees for former foster children. The bill passed, and the experience flipped a switch.

"When I had the opportunity to go down to the state Legislature, I saw that I enjoyed being in the policy discussions and really being a part of the change, as opposed to being on the outside," Smith says. "I really wanted to be on the inside, where the action was."

ASU professors 'take aim' at attack advertising

SPGS Foundation Professors Kim Fridkin and Patrick Kenney's new book "Taking Aim at Attack Advertising" examines negative political ads through surveys, experiments, facial expression analysis, content analyses and focus groups.

Fridkin, who is part of the School of Politics and Global Studies, spoke to ASU Now about why it is increasingly important to understand how attack advertising works and what to expect as we head into the 2020 elections:

Cybersecurity expert joins ASU as professor of practice

Peter W. Singer, a new professor of practice in the School of Politics and Global Studies, was in Tempe this semester to begin filming for a course within Arizona State University’s global security online master’s degree program.

“Peter Singer brings extraordinary insight and expertise on the changing character of war and conflict to the online MA in global security and will be a key contributor to our efforts to link ASU with major thought leaders impacting security policy and practice,” said Daniel Rothenberg, professor of practice in the School of Politics and Global Studies, co-director of the Center on the Future of War, and a senior fellow at New America.
